Who is Katibat al-Tawhid wa-l-Jihad?
Who is Katibat al-Tawhid wa-l-Jihad?

The Uzbek jihadi faction based in Idlib recently designated a terrorist organization by the US
Background

On 7 March 2022, the United States declared Idlib-based jihadi faction Katibat al-Tawhid wa-I-Jihad ('Tavhid va Jihod' or KTJ) a terrorist organization. In addition to the US's Specially Designated Global Terrorist (SDGT) list Katibat al-Tawhid wa-I-Jihad was placed on the United Nations Security Council's 'ISIL and al-Qa'ida Sanctions List,' meaning all UN member states are now required to implement an asset freeze, travel ban, and arms embargo on the organization and its membership. According to the U.S. Department of State this decision was due to the Katibat al-Tawhid wa-I-Jihad's alleged affiliation with al-Qa'idah, its cooperation with several other designated terrorist groups such as Hay'at Tahrir al-Sham (HTS), and it being linked to several attacks outside of Syria since 2017.

Katibat al-Tawhid wa-I-Jihad, also known as "Jannat Oshiklari" ('Lovers of Heaven'), 'Tavhid va Jihod,' or KTJ, is a small jihadi organization primarily made up of ethnic Uzbeks and other foreign fighters from Central Asia. The group was created at some point in 2013 or 2014 out of a jama'at of Uzbeks affiliated with Jabhat al-Nusra and its ally Katibat al-Imam al-Bukhari, the largest Uzbek-run jihadi faction in Syria. The reasoning behind Tavhid va Jihod's initial formation as an independent group is unclear, for it remained close with Jabhat al-Nusra ever since, formally pledging bay'ah to Nusra (and al-Qa'idah) in September 2015.
Who is Katibat al-Tawhid wa-l-Jihad?

Since Tavhid va Jihad’s formation in 2014 it has operated across opposition-controlled Northwest Syria. Its fighters have participated in numerous battles fought against the regime over the years, from Jisr al-Shughur and Latakia in the west, to various fronts across Idlib and northern Hama, to Aleppo in the east. Most recently Tavhid va Jihad fighters have been seen manning the frontlines in Jebel al-Zawiyah, around the Aleppo-Idlib border near al-Atarib, and in the mountains of Latakia.
As with other small muhajirin factions, many Tavhid va Jihad fighters have combat experience outside of Syria and carry out various specialized tasks such as serving as inghimasi shock troops and or in sniper squadrons.

Image (4) – Tavhid va Jihad members undergo sniper instruction (source)
Like all armed factions in northwestern Syria, Tavhid va Jihad primarily operates Soviet-era Russian and Eastern European-produced weapons, either captured over the years from the Syrian army or bought on the Idlib black market. At times its fighters have been seen using Turkish and American made weaponry.

Image (5) – A member of Tavhid va Jihad with Turkish-made 120mm mortar shells (source)

Image (6) – Recent Tavhid va Jihad muhajirin learning how to operate a US-made TOW anti-tank guided missile system (source)
These most likely stem from stockpiles of other groups in Idlib that have since been sold to or seized by jihadi factions. Tawhid va Jihad’s possession of such weaponry, including a plethora of Anti-Tank Guided Missile (ATGM) systems implies that it is relatively well funded, likely through clandestine donations by supporters over the internet. On at least one occasion Tawhid va Jihad has been seen operating a Suicide Vehicle-Borne Improvised Explosive Device (SVBIED). This occurred on 1 March 2020 when a KTJ fighter blew himself up in a car bomb attack targeting a regime position during the defense of Jebel al-Zawiyah.

Image (7) – The driver of Tawhid va Jihad’s March 2020 SVBIED attack in Jebel al-Zawiya
(source)

Image (8) – the March 2020 SVBIED attack on a regime position in Jebel al-Zawiyah (source)
Membership

According to a source of STJ’s within an Idlib opposition faction, Tavhid va Jihad’s members and largely reside in Jebel al-Summaq and in the Jisr al-Shughur countryside and maintain a distance from local civilian life. The source estimated that Tavhid va Jihad fields approximately 500 fighters, the majority of whom are ethnically Uzbek or Tajik, many from the Fergana valley. Ali al-Hamwi, an expert on Islamic groups in Syria placed the number higher, at 1,200, and told STJ that many of them gained fighting experience in Afghanistan, in support of the Taliban against the US military. One noteworthy aspect of Tavhid va Jihad’s membership is the group’s repeated claims to attract new recruits from abroad, a quite rare phenomenon since Turkey clamped down on cross border traffic in and out of Syria beginning in 2014. These claims correspond with reports of Tavhid va Jihad recruitment networks still active in Central Asia.

Image (9) – Jebel al-Summaq and villages in the Jisr al-Shughur area where Tavhid va Jihad fighters reside (STJ)
Leadership

For the first five years of its existence Tavhid va Jihod was led by Sirajuddin Mukhtarov/’Abu Salah al-Uzbeki,’ an ethnic Uzbek from Osh province, Kyrgyzstan. Osh is located along the Kyrgyzstan-Uzbekistan border on the edge of the Fergana valley – a region that’s become a hotspot for jihadist radicalization since the fall of the Soviet Union. According to various biographies of Abu Salah he received religious training in Syria in the 2000s, allegedly at al-Fatah al-Islami Institute in Damascus, before he returned to Kyrgyzstan. There he worked as an assistant Imam at the Kariman mosque in the Osh province town of Kara-Suu.

After the outbreak of the war, Abu Salah traveled back to Syria where he joined Katibat al-Imam al-Bukhari in 2012. Due to his Islamic education and speaking skills, Abu Salah became quite influential within transnational Central Asian jihadi circles. By 2020 Abu Salah’s influence had grown to a point in which one researcher wrote that his “...Telegram channel has the largest audience among other jihadist figures of post-Soviet countries.”
Abu Salah remained the amir of Tavhid va Jihad until April 2019, when he stepped down from his leadership position in agreement with the group's Shura council. At the time, a UN report claimed that he "left the group's leadership to focus on recruitment and fundraising following an injury in a terrorist operation." He remained with Tavhid va Jihad until mid 2020. Replacing Abu Salah as amir in April 2019 was 'Abd al-'Aziz al-Uzbeki/Domla/Hafizullah (referred to as 'Khikmatov' in the same UN report). 'Abd al-'Aziz al-Uzbeki shares the same background as Abu Salah: an ethnic Uzbek from the Fergana valley.
According to various reports, 'Abd al-'Aziz only entered Syria earlier that year. Prior to this, he was a member of the Islamic Jihad Union, an al-Qa'idah-linked Uzbek jihadist group active in Afghanistan, Pakistan, and Syria, where "he served as deputy to the leader of UJG in Afghanistan." Soon after becoming KTJ's amir, 'Abd al-'Aziz appointed Ahluddin Navqotiy as the group's imam. Navqotiy, who reported arrived from Turkey to undertake the position, is active on Instagram and Telegram where he shares his sermons and KTJ media.

After a series of events in spring 2020, it became apparent that HTS had in fact been behind Abu Salah's dismissal. Tavhid va Jihad had joined HTS, the Jabhat al-Nusra successor group in February of 2017. On 16 June 2020, Abu Salah and two others were arrested by HTS’s internal security forces in Idlib. While it was initially reported that this was due to debts he owed, later statements by the parties involved shed some light on Abu Salah’s relationship with Tawahid va Jihad and HTS over the past year. According to a statement published by HTS a week after the arrest, the group’s judiciary council had dismissed and replaced him in 2019 due to cases of robbery and kidnapping. It appears that in the spring of 2020 Abu Salah filed lawsuits against HTS, which then formed a committee to deal with the matter. Eventually, on 19 April 2020 (25 Sha’ban 1441 AH), he was found guilty and was transferred from Tawahid va Jihad to work in HTS’s military office. Rather than comply, on 30 May 2020 Abu Salah and 30 of his followers left HTS altogether and joined Jabhat Ansar al-Din, an al-Qa’idah-friendly jihadi faction with a mixed Russian-speak and Arab membership. Soon after this, Abu Salah was arrested, and would not be released by HTS until 2021.

Image (14) – The HTS statement on the dismissal and eventual arrest of Abu Salah (source)

Some have speculated that the conflict between Abu Salah and HTS is not actually related to supposed abuses by the former, but rather stems from his continued allegiance to al-Qa’idah. Despite HTS’s break with the organization, Abu Salah reportedly renewed his bay’ah to Aymen al-Zawahiri in January 2019 via a Telegram audio recording, just months before he was deposed from his leadership position. When he left the group in the spring of 2020 due to the HTS committee decision, Abu Salah joined Jabhat Ansar al-Din, a jihadi faction aligned with al-Qa’idah.
Who is Katibat al-Tawhid wa-l-Jihad?

Katibat al-Tawhid wa-l-Jihad is a Qa'idah affiliate Tanzim Hurras al-Din. Furthermore, his arrest in June 2020 coincides with a broader HTS crackdown on al-Qa'idah linked figures across Idlib.

Since this episode and Abu Salah's departure from Tavhid va Jihad, the organization has had no reported issues with Hay'at Tahrir al-Sham.

Operations Abroad?

According to the March 2022 US State Department statement, Tavhid va Jihad was responsible for two terrorist attacks outside of Syria: an August 2016 attack on the Chinese Embassy in Bishkek, Kyrgyzstan, and the March 2017 bombing of the St. Petersburg metro in Russia.
Tavhid va Jihad has been blamed for these attacks in the past by Kyrgyzstani and Russian authorities, however they never claimed responsibility for them, and little evidence of their involvement has been publicized by Kyrgyzstan or Russia. Jihadism experts Aymenn Jawad al-Tamimi and Caleb Weiss speculate that the perpetrators of the Bishkek and St. Petersburg attacks weren’t Tavhid va Jihad members but were in communication with Abu Salah al-Uzbeki, who likely encouraged them or possibly order the attacks himself. Since the group’s founding in 2015, multiple raids by Kyrgyzstani and Russian security forces have taken place, leading to the arrest of alleged Tavhid va Jihad members who either fought in Syria before returning to Central Asia, or worked as local recruiters for the organization. The most recent of these operations was carried out by the Russian FSB on 25 August 2021 in various cities around Russia, reportedly resulting in the arrest of 31 individuals.
Conclusion

It is unclear why the U.S. decided to designate Tavhid va Jihad as a terrorist organization at this specific time. Given that KTJ pledged bay'ah to Jabhat al-Nusra and its later iteration Hay’at Tahrir al-Sham, considered terrorist organizations by the US, one would assume the Uzbek group would’ve been designated by the U.S. earlier. While the American statement specifically accuses them of being "affiliated with al-Qa’idah," this is contradicted by Tavhid va Jihad's current membership within HTS and the fact that its former leader Abu Salah seems to left the group because of his continued support of al-Qa’idah, defecting from the group and HTS to Jabhat Ansar al-Din. Aymenn Jawad al-Tamimi has speculated that the continued affiliation of HTS with foreign fighters such as KTJ is the primary reason why HTS remains on terrorist lists, as the international community is concerned that these foreign fighter blocs, which work with Hay’at Tahrir al-Sham, may serve as inspirers, facilitators and supporters for those who conduct attacks abroad, even if those blocs do not actually conduct those attacks and claim responsibility for them.

It's unlikely that this designation will have much of an effect on the Tavhid va Jihad inside Syria. While it means that its leadership will possibly be targeted as part of the broader U.S. drone assassination campaign in Idlib, the group's digital fundraising capabilities are unlikely to be hampered by international sanctions. As this listing will not affect Tavhid va Jihad's relationship with HTS, itself a designated terrorist organization, it likely will not change the military role the group plays on the frontlines of Idlib. Regardless of the U.S. designation, Russian and Central Asian security forces will likely continue to crack down on Tavhid va Jihad supporter networks across the former Soviet Union.
About Us:

Syrians for Truth and Justice (STJ) is a nonprofit, nongovernmental organization monitoring human rights violations in Syria. Founded in 2015, STJ has been based in France since 2019.

STJ is an impartial and independent Syrian human rights organization operating across Syria. Our network of field researchers monitor and report human rights violations occurring on the ground in Syria, while our international team of human rights experts, lawyers, and journalists gather evidence, examine emerging patterns of violations, and analyze how violations break domestic Syrian and international law.

We are committed to documenting violations of human rights committed by all parties in the Syrian conflict and elevating the voices of all Syrians victimized by human rights violations, regardless of their ethnicity, religion, political affiliation, class, and/or gender. Our commitment to human rights monitoring is founded on the idea that professional human rights documentation meeting international standards is the first step to uncovering the truth and achieving justice in Syria.